FOR THE LITCHFIELD ENQUIRER.

THE DEAD.

Where sleep the mighty dead?
The proud pomp of earth
Are gathered o'er their glorious bed
As records of their worth—
Their worth, whose glory like a flood
Hath swept the earth with brother's blood.

Where sleep the mighty dead?
O'er many a red right-hand
The manumission's pride is spread,
Death-offering of a land
Whose holiest sons unreck'd of fell,
His triumph-sons of blood to swell.

And where they rest in pride,
Beneath the marble high,
Telling each passer that they died
Proudly as conquerors die.
For 'twas their holiest wish to be
A name amid posterity.

Where sleep the nameless dead,
The true, the brave, the free?
Ask of the fleeting winds their bed;
Ask of the foaming sea;
For wind and wave alike have swept
O'er holy graves, unknown, unwept.

Where sleep the nameless dead?
The mountains of their land
Above their wild and lonely bed
Eternal records stand:
Of fearless beings who had cast
Their life out on the battle's blast.

Where sleep the nameless dead?
The martyr's spirit none'd
On high—when bright around was shed
The light of pure and sword;
And his pure dust by wind and wave
Was scatter'd—making earth a grave.

And let them sleep secure—
No marble proud we rear—
Their is a fame that doth endure
In a far brighter sphere—
Where angels have in rapture sung
Of names unknown to human tongue.

DR. JOHNSON'S PUDDING.

Last summer I made an excursion to Scotland, with the intention of completing my series of views, and went over the same ground described by the learned tourists, Drs. Johnson and Boswell. I am in the habit of taking very long walks on these occasions; and perceiving a storm threaten, I made the best of my way to a small building. I arrived in time at a neat little inn, and was received by a respectable looking man and his wife, who did all in their power to make me comfortable. After eating some excellent fried mutton chops, and drinking a quart of ale, I asked the landlord to sit down and partake of a bowl of whiskey punch. I found him as the Scotch generally are, very intelligent, and full of anecdote, of which the following may serve as a specimen:—

"Sir," said the landlord, "this inn was formerly kept by Andrew Macgregor, a relation of mine, and these hard bottom chairs (in which we are now sitting) were, years ago, filled by the great tourists, Doctors Johnson and Boswell, travelling like the Lion and Jackall. Boswell generally preceded the Doctor in search of food, and being much pleased with the looks of the house, followed his nose into the larder, where he saw a fine leg of mutton. He ordered it to be roasted with the utmost expedition, and gave particular orders for a nice pudding. 'Now,' says he, 'make the best of all puddings.' Elated with his good luck, he immediately went out in search of his friend, and saw the giant of learning, slowly advancing on a pony.

"My dear Sir," said Boswell, out of breath with joy, 'good news! I have just bespoken at a comfortable clean inn here, a delicious leg of mutton; it is now getting ready, and I will flatter myself that we shall make an excellent meal.' Johnson looked pleased—'And I hope,' said he, 'you have bespoken a pudding.' 'Sir, your favorite pudding,' replied the other.

"Johnson got off the pony, and the poor animal, relieved from the giant, smelt his way into the stable. Boswell ushered the Doctor into the house, and left him to prepare for his delicious treat. Johnson feeling his coat rather damp, from the mist of the mountains, went into the kitchen, and threw his upper garment on a chair before the fire; he sat on the hob, near a little boy who was very busily attending the meat. Johnson occasionally peeped behind his coat, while the boy kept basting the mutton. Johnson did not like the appearance of his head; when he shifted the basting ladle from one hand, the other hand was never idle, and the Doctor thought at the same time he saw something fall on the meat, upon which he determined to eat no mutton on that day. The dinner announced, Boswell exclaimed, 'My dear Doctor, here comes the mutton—what a piece, done to a turn, and looks so beautifully brown! The Doctor uttered—'After a short grace Boswell said—

"I suppose I am to carve as usual; what part shall I help you to?' The Doctor replied—

"My dear Boswell I did not like to tell you before, but I am determined to abstain from meat to-day."

"O dear, this is a great disappointment," said Boswell.

"Say no more; I shall make myself amply amends with the pudding."

Boswell commenced the attack, and made the first cut at the mutton. 'How the gravy runs; what fine flavoured fat, so nice and brown too. Oh, sir, you would have relished this prime piece of mutton.'

"The meat being removed, in came the long wished for pudding. The Doctor looked joyous, fell eagerly to, and in a few minutes nearly finished the pudding! The table was cleared, and Boswell said:

"Doctor while I was eating the mutton you seemed frequently inclined to laugh; pray, tell me what tickled your fancy?"

"The Doctor then literally told him all that had passed at this kitchen fire, about the boy and the basting. Boswell turned as pale as a parsnip, and, sick of himself and the company, darted out of the room. Somewhat relieved on returning he insisted on seeing the dirty little rascally boy, whom he severely reprimanded before Johnson. The poor boy cried—the Doctor laughed.

"You little, filthy snivelling hound," said Boswell, "when you basted the meat, why did you not put on the cap I saw you in this morning?"

"I couldn't, sir," said the boy.

"No! why couldn't you?" said Boswell.

"Because my mammy took it from me to boil the pudding in!"

"The Doctor gathered up his Herculean frame, stood erect, touched the ceiling with his wig, stared or squinted—indeed looked any way but the right way.—At last with mouth open (none of the smallest) and stomach heaving, he with some difficulty recovered his breath, and looking at Boswell with dignified contempt, he roared out, with the lungs of a Stentor—

"Mr. Boswell, sir, leave off laughing, and under pain of my eternal displeasure, never utter a single syllable of this abominable adventure while you breathe." "And so sir," said mine host, "you have the positive fact from the simple mouth of your humble servant."—Angelo's Remin.
